IN CLOVER.

Young Harold Gray one afternoon Walked over to the farm His heart as by a charm. She was not home. He looked for her! He scarched the garden over, The grove, the meadow, and at last He found her in the clover.

Ah! fair she looked, as there the stood, All in a field of green, With rosy checks, and sweet blue eyes, And hair of golden sheen. Her robe was white; a broad straw hat Kept off the sun's hot rays, She did not see him, for she turned Upon the earth her gaze.

She started when he spoke to her, And blushes mantled over She answered : "Four-leaved cloven Then Harold Gray stooped down and searched The clover all around, While she looked on; at last he plucked Four green leaves from the ground. She said that he would have good luck In all he sought to do.

'Ah! that no lover ever learned, Except by trial", she said, He whispered something in her ear, And she blushed rosy red. softly the breeze of summer blew Across the field of clover, And to the farmer, at his door,

For he knew what it meant. But that was several years ago; Now on a summer's day, There in the clover fields he see His two grandchildren play ; And Harold Gray as one by one The golden days pass over, Thanks Nellie for his happiness
